Students Learn Poise, Culture, Rhythm through El Monte City School District Dance Program

EL MONTE – Gidley School fifth-grader Julian Saucedo had two left feet and no confidence on the dance floor when he started the Conga Kids program – but now he tangos and foxtrots with passion and even persuaded his mother to enroll him in private dance lessons to continue his new interest.

“I like the rhythms and beats that we learned in the program,” Saucedo said. “I like dancing the salsa the most because I like moving my hips. It’s an easy dance to do.”

Conga Kids is a 10-week dance program that teaches students rhythm, self-confidence, trust and physical fitness. The program was created by Conga Kids, a nonprofit arts-in-education charitable foundation, to promote creativity, inter-personal communication skills and the culture of music in Los Angeles County.

Conga Kids was first offered to El Monte City School District’s Shipser, Potrero, Cortada and Wilkerson School in 2017-18. It expanding to include all 890 fifth-graders across the District’s 14 schools in 2018-19. Assistant Superintendent of Instruction Virginia Castro is in charge of the program at El Monte City School District.

“The Conga Kids program’s mission is to promote and expand our students’ appreciation for the arts,” Castro said. “But it also helps them with interpersonal skills – using teamwork, boosting confidence and teaching leadership.”

Practices are held twice weekly during P.E. classes. During these sessions, students learn the how to perform the merengue, swing, salsa, tango and foxtrot.

Ninety-eight students from Cherrylee, Cleminson, Columbia, Cortada, Durfee, Gidley and Le Gore schools were chosen to participate in a Conga Kids semi-final competition on Dec. 12 at Durfee School.

Students were scored on their ability to dance while maintaining posture, performing the correct steps for each song, keeping the beat and putting on a good show.
